To Catch a Renegade Spook

The middle-aged man with the Irish passport identifying him as Philip McCormick had been detained in the Santo Domingo airport for four hours last week when he got the bad news: his travel documents would not permit him to enter the Dominican Republic. "McCormick," who had arrived from Madrid shortly before 5 a.m., was hustled from the airport international zone onto a Dominicana flight about to depart for New York. When he protested that he had no visa for the United States, he was told not to worry. And indeed, that proved the least of his concerns. When the plane landed at Kennedy International Airport, U.S. marshals—including two who had shadowed the traveler from Europe—arrested him. "McCormick" turned out to be Edwin P. Wilson, the renegade former CIA agent turned arms merchant and military adviser to Libya's Muammar Kaddafi.

The capture was regarded as a major coup and announced by Attorney General William French Smith himself. Wilson, who fled the United States two years ago rather than face Federal charges of conspiracy to commit murder and smuggle explosives to Libya, was lured from a luxurious Tripoli hideaway by a U.S. secret operation that convinced the former CIA operative that the Dominican Republic would provide him refuge. The plan was executed by former associates, who pretended to arrange for him to operate his businesses out of the Caribbean island. Their assurances that the arrangements were completed brought Wilson out of Libya on a circuitous route through Switzerland and Spain—and landed him in a New York jail cell.

"Heat": The operation preyed on Wilson's fears that he was increasingly unsafe in Libya. He knew that the Reagan Administration was committed to destabilizing the regime. U.S. officials also believed he had fallen from favor with Kaddafi for his failure to make good on all his promises and would be anxious to enjoy his spoils in less austere political and social climes. "It wasn't a smart thing to do, but I think he felt he had to go," says one U.S. official. "I'm sure he was feeling the heat from Kaddafi."

Within hours of his arrest, Wilson was feeling some scorching heat in the United States as well. After a 25-minute hearing in Federal court in Brooklyn, where prosecutors described the CIA veteran as "intelligent and resourceful," Magistrate A. Simon Chrein set bail for Wilson at a staggering $20 million. Later in the week he was transferred to Washington, where he was arraigned on charges that included running 20 tons of C-4 plastic explosives—along with timing devices and other bomb components—to Libya; recruiting American ordnance experts to manufacture bombs in household items such as ashtrays, lamps and vases; recruiting U.S. Army Green Berets to train prospective terrorists in Libya, and attempting to hire a Cuban former CIA contract agent to assassinate a prominent Libyan dissident in Egypt for $1 million.

Grand juries in Houston, Denver and Washington are looking into Wilson's activities after he severed his official CIA ties and contracted, in 1976, to provide intelligence, weaponry and training to Kaddafi. The Washington grand jury is investigating charges that Wilson bribed officials in the U.S. defense and intelligence establishment to assist his weapons trade. Douglas Schlachter, who has pleaded guilty to munitions-smuggling charges and is now in the Federal Witness Protection Program, has charged that government officials assisted Wilson in selling his wares to foreign military procurement officials. Investigators are also trying to determine if Wilson was provided with information about planned purchases by foreign governments that gave him an inside track on contracts.

Investigators are also anxious to question Wilson about his close ties with former ranking CIA officials Theodore Shackley and Thomas Clines. Those ties, some former Wilson associates insist, led them to believe that Wilson's Libyan activities were part of a CIA-sanctioned operation. Other prominent names linked to Wilson by his former colleagues include Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, current chairman of the Middle East Task Group in the Pentagon's Office for International Security Affairs, and Erich von Marbod, a former top official of the Defense Security Assistance Agency, which is responsible for foreign military sales. Attorneys for Shackley, Secord and von Marbod have declined comment on the Wilson investigation, and NEWSWEEK was unable to reach Clines for comment.

Despite the tremors in Langley and at the Pentagon following Wilson's arrest, the lengthy investigations so far have resulted only in charges against Wilson himself and three former confederates, including ex-CIA agent Frank Terpil. Terpil is still a fugitive and reappeared recently in Beirut after a lengthy disappearance that gave rise to rumors that he had been murdered. Federal officials are uncertain how much information Wilson actually has to offer, but they are certain he will offer something—even at the expense of friends—in an attempt to get himself off the hook. "Wilson's a wheeler-dealer," said one official. "He makes a deal when he has to make a deal—no back-to-the-wall stuff for him."

Ex-CIA Agent Wilson Said Lured Back to U.S. by 'Deal'

was refused entry into the Dominican Republic and was routed to New York. He is being held on $20 million bail under a 1980 federal indictment accusing him of providing terrorist training, equipment and explosives to Libyan ruler Col. Muammar Qaddafi.

Keiser said he discussed Wilson's value as an intelligence source with several officials in the U.S. intelligence community. Keiser also said he recently accepted a $200,000 loan from Wilson and was to receive another $250,000 last week.

However, Keiser said, the loans represented Wilson's 5 percent investment in a Florida real estate venture of Keiser's company, Meadow Wood Associates Inc., and were not related to Keiser's services as an intermediary.

Wilson's lawyer, John Keats, said last week at Wilson's arraignment that Wilson intends to contest the legality of his return to the United States.

According to knowledgeable officials, Wilson claims to have a letter delivered by Keiser from Mark Richard, a deputy assistant attorney general, and a separate letter from Assistant U.S. Attorney E. Lawrence Barcella Jr. telling Wilson that the Justice Department was interested in arranging a meeting with the then-fugitive.

In addition, Wilson says he and three others, including a Swiss lawyer, saw the purported NSC letter giving a specific pledge of safe haven.

The operation that ended with the successful return of Wilson was so sensitive that identification of Keiser as the intermediary was not disclosed to U.S. Attorney Stanley Harris or to other senior Justice Department officials, according to officials involved in the case.

The operation also apparently involved sophisticated surveillance of Keiser's contacts with Wilson, one federal official said. For instance, federal investigators were aware that Keiser was returning to the United States with the $200,000 loan from Wilson even though Keiser had not disclosed the payment to them.

Keiser said he first met Wilson in South America 20 years ago, when Wilson was an active CIA operative. Keiser would not say whether he has worked for the U.S. government. He said he does not defend Wilson's activities in Libya.

Other officials said Keiser's first overtures to Wilson eight months ago were made through a man identified as Dan Drake, who Keiser said is "an employee of mine."

Keiser acknowledged that he and Drake traveled to Libya on several occasions to meet with Wilson, and that Keiser re-established his relationship with Wilson. "Wilson trusted him," one federal official said.

Keiser said he determined that Wilson's Libyan operations were of potential value to U.S. intelligence agencies.

"I thought it would be possible for Ed to sit down with our representatives of those agencies because in my estimation he would have been a help," Keiser said.

Knowledgeable federal officials said Keiser's efforts were part of the orchestrated "con" to persuade Wilson that he could return and make a satisfactory deal with federal prosecutors who have pursued him unsuccessfully since April, 1980.

Propper said Keiser was motivated by a desire to help the government because of his association with Wilson and by a firm belief that Wilson might be able to rehabilitate himself by sharing the knowledge he had gained in many years of work with hostile governments.

Edwin Wilson Said Enticed Back to U.S. by 'Deal' Offer

By Al Kamen and Patrick E. Tyler
Washington Post Staff Writers

A close associate of former CIA agent Edwin P. Wilson lured him out of Libya by offering a "deal" under which Wilson could travel safely to the Dominican Republic and trade intelligence information for government assistance in the criminal case against him, according to knowledgeable officials.

Wilson has claimed since his capture in New York City last week that he was shown a letter on National Security Council stationery promising him a 48-hour grace period to leave Libya and meet with unidentified U.S. officials for secret discussions, other officials said.

Knowledgeable officials said yesterday for the first time that they had worked with Northern Virginia businessman Ernest R. Keiser for the last eight months in an elaborate scheme to persuade Wilson that U.S. intelligence agencies were interested in trading information and that the Justice Department might be willing to negotiate reduced charges.

Keiser, through his attorney, Eugene M. Propper, said late last night that he "did work with the Justice Department in an effort to get Ed Wilson back to the United States."

Earlier yesterday Keiser said in an interview that he had been working as an "old friend" of Wilson to arrange his return to the United States, but added that he "definitely did not help the government catch Ed Wilson."

In that interview, he said that his dealings with Wilson were "completely independent" of government efforts to capture Wilson.

Propper, explaining Keiser's initial statements, said Keiser was worried about recriminations over his role but reluctantly decided to acknowledge his cooperation because a government promise of confidential treatment had been breached.

Wilson, 53, was arrested after he

June 16, 1982

Gentlemen:

Only on rare occasions do I have the time to sit down and write a letter of approval or disapproval to individuals or organizations, out side of my usual sphere of business. This happens to be one of those times.

Just this morning, I read in the newspapers that the Justice Department has successfully seized former CIA agent, Edwin P. Wilson. In the words of Attorney General William French Smith, it was the "conclusion of an outstanding investigative effort".

Thus, after a year long effort by our government, Wilson was finally lured into the trap. However, looking over Wilson's record, one cannot help but be impressed by his past performance, even though, at the present time he is held in low esteem. But, after all, Wilson was one of ours, was'nt he? Over ten years service with the CIA should count for something. Or does it?

Some of us would like to know "WHY???" the same amount of effort has not been expended by the Justice Department towards the apprehension of versatile Soviet agents, so busy at work here, in our own country. I can't remember the last time you caught one. No doubt, the Justice Dept. felt that it would be easier to approach Wilson than to confront a superior Soviet agent.

Be that as it may; my present position does not allow me to be too critical. Please inform Attorney General William French Smith, that I am looking forward to meeting him "face to face"-real soon.

Thank you,

Frank Terpil

FRANCIS EDWARD TERPIL -
FUGITIVE

On April 23, 1980, after an extensive investigation, the Federal Grand Jury, District of Columbia, returned a ten-count indictment against Edwin P. Wilson, Jerome S. Brower and Terpil. These three individuals were charged with a variety of offenses, including violations of the Foreign Agents Registration Act, Perjury, Solicitation to Commit Murder and Conspiracy to supply the Libyan Government with personnel and explosives and to train others in making explosive devices in a terrorist training project.

On April 25, 1980, Terpil was arrested by Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) Agents and released on bond. When Terpil failed to make a court appearance on local charges on September 4, 1980, in New York City, the Federal arrest warrant was reissued. Terpil has remained a Federal fugitive since then.

On December 22, 1979, Terpil was arrested by the New York City Police on firearms charges. When he failed to appear for trial (September 4, 1980) on the charges, he was later convicted in absentia and sentenced to fifty-three years in prison on the charges of possession of weapons and manufacture, transportation and disposition of weapons, dangerous instruments and appliances.

The following is a description of Terpil:

Date and Place of Birth:	November 2, 1939, Brooklyn, New York
Hair:	Brown, receding hairline (may now be bald)
Eyes:	Hazel

INSTRUCTIONS

- (1) Submit an original only of the FD-515 within 30 days of a recordable accomplishment. Submission of each statistic should not be delayed awaiting the accumulation of several statistics.
- (2) The date the FD-515 is submitted must be shown.
- (3) The field office file number and appropriate subclassification, if applicable, must be set forth.
- (4) Category A - "PRELIMINARY JUDICIAL PROCESS" - This indicates the number of subjects against whom judicial action has taken place. The number of subjects must be indicated with a numerical entry and not with the letter "X" or a check mark.

FOR EXAMPLE: If 4 subjects have 10 Bills of Indictment returned against them, enter 4 on line 3.

- (5) Category B - "FINAL JUDICIAL PROCESS" - This, again, indicates the number of subjects and the number of counts or violations for which the subject is convicted. The number of counts shown on lines 5 and 7 must equal or exceed the number of subjects indicated on lines 4 and 6, never be less. Category 4 and 5 or 6 and 7 cannot be claimed prior to sentencing.

FOR EXAMPLE: If a subject is convicted for multiple counts in a single indictment or is convicted on a number of individual indictments, the entry in either case will be one subject convicted.

- (6) Category C - "SENTENCES" - Indicate only the number of subjects and where a combination of sentences are imposed, enter only the most severe sentence. The number of subjects cannot exceed the number of subjects indicated in Category B, lines 4 and 6. The amount of the fine (line 5), if any, is always claimed in conjunction with either lines 1, 2, 3, or 4.

- (7) Category D - "ARRESTS/LOCATES/SUMMONS" - Indicate the number of subjects under designated priorities.

- (8) Category E - "RECOVERY AND LOSS PREVENTED" - Recoveries - When stolen or illegally possessed items with intrinsic value are recovered as a part of an FBI investigation, the value of the item should be recorded. Restitutions will be recorded in this category when ordered as part of a sentence.

Potential Economic Loss Prevented - Record items such as counterfeit securities, money orders, Cashier Checks, Travelers Checks, and pirated copyright and patented material.

A justification airtel must be submitted with the FD-515 as an enclosure when the recovery or potential economic loss prevented exceeds $1,000,000.

- (9) Category F - "CIVIL MATTERS" - To record an entry in this category, it is necessary to conduct actual investigation in the matter. Both the original amount sought and the damages awarded by the court are to be recorded under amount of suit and settlement or award. Therefore, if numbers 1 or 3 are completed, it is necessary that number 2 and 4 also be completed even if by zero. The only exception would be when monies are paid by the subject in Ascertaining Financial Ability Matters wherein it is not necessary to record an entry in F3.

- (10) "REMARKS" - Identify the name of the subject(s) and when reporting a conviction identify the Title, Section, and Code applicable to each count convicted.

- (11) Errors - If a previously submitted FD-515 is determined to contain an error after verifying the statistic on the Monthly Statistical Results Report, submit an original only of the FD-515 clearly marking the top of the form in red ink with the word "AMENDED." Other than the title, FBIHQ file number (if known), field office file number, and date, only complete the category being corrected by a numerical entry representing the appropriate decrease or increase. If this entry represents a decrease, insert a minus "-" sign and if an increase, insert a plus "+" sign directly to the left of the numerical entries which will signify the type of correction.

FBI probing ex-spy's role in task force

By JOE TRENTO

Staff reporter

WASHINGTON — A former CIA agent, already wanted in a plot to murder a high Libyan official, tried to shake down the director of naval intelligence, the FBI has learned.

The same suspect, who was the civilian head of the highly secret intelligence Task Force 157, is also charged with private illegal arms deals.

Edmund P. Wilson, who has been wanted on a federal fugitive warrant since April, has become a pawn in the rivalry between the two admirals who run the U.S. intelligence community.

One of the two, Adm. Bobby Ray Inman, director of the National Security Agency (NSA), confirmed last week that he had asked for an FBI probe into Wilson's activities.

A spokesman for the other, Adm. Stansfield Turner, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said the CIA would have no comment on the matter.

Turner, a classmate of President Jimmy Carter at the Naval Academy, has failed in his attempt to convince the president to put all American intelligence activities under the CIA's control.

Inman, a little-known intelligence professional who is highly respected by Congress, earned Turner's wrath because the NSA has been given increasing control over the nation's spy satellite program. Inman's agency is responsible for the nation's secret electronic communications, intelligence messages and cryptography.

The Sunday News Journal has learned that in recent weeks Turner and his deputies in the CIA have briefed reporters from major news organizations about Wilson and Task Force 157, which grew from a small naval intelligence operation into a large-scale spy group. Those familiar with the briefings say the CIA has tried to lay the blame for the task force's problems at Inman's feet.

Assistant U.S. Attorney E. Lawrence Barcella Jr., chief prosecutor in the case against Wilson, confirmed that the investigation into Wilson was prompted by a complaint from the CIA that Wilson had been palming himself off as a CIA agent. The CIA told Barcella that Wilson no longer had anything to do with the agency.

What the CIA apparently did not know is that Inman gave extensive testimony to FBI investigators about what he had learned about Wilson and Task Force 157.

Inman, in a rare telephone interview, told the Sunday News Journal that he closed down Task Force 157. "I closed it down because it was out of control and because its continued operation was a drain on Navy resources."

"I fired Wilson because I thought he was a petty grafter, what we call a 5 percent."

The most serious charge in the indictment against Wilson is his alleged involvement in a conspiracy to murder an opponent of Libyan leader Moammar Khadafi in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1977.

The indictment, handed down in Washington last April, also includes several counts of conspiracy to ship rifles to Libya. Then, as now, the United States had a ban on shipping weapons to Libya.

Wilson, 56, whose arms dealings made him a multi-millionaire, remains at large. When Wilson failed to respond to the indictment on April 23, U.S. District Court in Washington issued a warrant for his arrest.

According to Barcella, Wilson is believed to be "moving between his offices in Switzerland and London or at his home in Tripoli [in Libya]. Most likely he is in Tripoli."

Barcella said he has talked with Wilson's attorney, Seymour Glanzer. Glanzer refused to comment on his client.

From sources in the CIA, at the National Security Agency, the FBI and in the Congress, the Sunday News Journal has put together an account of Task Force 157, Wilson's connections to the CIA and Inman's actions.

Task Force 157 was formed in 1968 by Admiral Thomas Moorer, when he was chief of naval operations, to give naval intelligence better communications and human spy capabilities.

When Henry Kissinger began his secret negotiations with China in 1971, he asked for military communications because he distrusted the CIA. Moorer offered him the Task Force and its secret frequencies — called the "SR 1 Channel."

In its investigation, the FBI found out that Wilson and his cronies — who had infiltrated the task force at the behest of the CIA — were actually sending the information to the CIA.

In 1974 Kissinger told a Senate committee that a Navy clerk assigned to his office, who had access to "eyes-only" messages to President Nixon, was also forwarding them to Moorer.

By the time Inman shut down the unit in late 1975, Task Force 157 had grown from a few intelligence operatives to 167 field agents and 200 headquarters officials.

Using a number of phony business fronts, the task force became a free agent, competing with and undermining other intelligence groups and dealing directly with foreign governments, some them hostile to the United States.

It was involved in a wide range of intelligence activities, many paralleling the activities of the CIA, including evaluating Soviet ballistic missile strength and anti-submarine warfare.

Inman told investigators that millions of dollars being spent by the task force could not be accounted for.

The bulk of the staff was drawn from CIA contract spies, not on full-time duty with the agency, or from the military. Exactly how the task force was put together and how it grew is still not clear.

After Wilson was fired by Inman, he resumed his contract work for the CIA by organizing a group of Cuban refugees to conduct terrorist activities in South Africa and Latin America. A number of the task force employees had been CIA-trained. Cuban operatives were hired by Wilson, according to FBI sources.

Although Wilson worked with the Task Force 157 project from 1971 to 1975, he remained on the CIA payroll and reported to Theodore Shackley, who had been former CIA director Richard Helms' right-hand man for clandestine operations.

When Inman fired Wilson, Shackley called the admiral and urged him to keep Wilson on. Shackley reported not to be with the CIA any more, could not be located for comment.

Inman, now 49, has served in nearly every top-level military intelligence post. He was director of naval intelligence from 1974 to 1976, director of the Defense Intelligence Agency between 1976 and 1977 and since then head of the NSA.

Inman told the FBI his troubles with Task Force 157 preceded his taking over naval intelligence in 1974.

When he was the naval intelligence officer for the Far East, he had been rebuffed in repeated attempts to learn about Task Force 157. He told the FBI that the task force reported directly to Washington and answered to no one in the field, a procedure considered highly unusual in the Navy's decentralized command system.

His disenchantment with the task force began early in his tenure as head of naval intelligence.

He learned that one task force employee had received kickbacks on contracts given to a company that supplied small boats for intelligence missions. The employee was fired by Inman but no charges were ever placed because a public trial might have compromised defense secrets.

After Inman took over naval intelligence, Sen. John J. McClellan, D-Ark., the powerful chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, invited him to brief committee staff members on the Navy's use of the F-18 jet fighter.

After the briefing, Inman told the FBI, a member of McClellan's staff suggested that they have lunch to discuss how the Office of Naval Intelligence could get its budget requests through the Senate smoothly. Inman described the staff member to the FBI as "McClellan's bagman."

Here's what happened then, as Inman related the story to the FBI:

Inman and an aide went to a nearby restaurant, where the McClellan aide introduced him to Edmund Wilson.

During the lunch, Wilson told Inman that his agency would have clearer sailing with McClellan's committee if Wilson's companies were given certain contracts for duplicating and other office services.

In the midst of the conversation, which Inman told the FBI made him a "little sick," Wilson suddenly said, "You know, admiral, I work for you."

Wilson told Inman he headed World Maritime, a company set up to channel secret money on behalf of Task Force 157. Wilson also invited Inman and his wife to his 600-acre farm in Upperville, Va. — "an invitation my wife managed to get us out of," the admiral told the FBI.

Inman told FBI agents, and the Sunday News Journal, that Wilson was nothing but a "5 percenter, a small time grafter" who was trying to shake down the chief of naval operations. FBI sources say they are investigating the charge.

Task Force 157 operated out of an Alexandria, Va., office tower not far from the Pentagon, where Wilson created a number of other business fronts to operate the unit. These included World Maritime, Aero-Maritime Corp. and Pearce Morgan Inc.

The Navy has never officially given any public acknowledgement of the task force.

Its existence surfaced, however, in an appeal to the Merit Systems Protection Board by 10 former task force employees who want retirement and federal service credit.

Washington attorney Bernard Fensterwald, who represents them, says that the men are all secretive about what they did for the task force.

Billy Denies Stories of Arms Deal

Reports on Libya Ties 'Ridiculous,' He Says

AMERICUS, Ga. (AP) — Billy Carter, saying reports of his alleged dealings with Libya have reached "ridiculous proportions," denied yesterday that he discussed supplying machine guns to the North African nation or securing the delivery of two aircraft from the United States.

With a Senate subcommittee scheduled to begin hearings today on the propriety of Billy Carter's ties with Libya, reporters asked the president's brother about several published reports on those dealings.

He denied one report, published yesterday in The Washington Star, quoting sources close to the congressional investigation as saying the president's brother had told the Libyans in 1978 that the U.S. government would permit the export of two Boeing 727 aircraft.

The planes later were released for shipment to the Libyans, but investigators were told by the officials responsible that Billy Carter had nothing to do with that decision.

Talking with reporters at an Americus motel, Billy Carter denied ever discussing the 727 deal with the Libyans.

"I told the Justice Department it was untrue," the president's brother said, adding facetiously, "It was nuclear submarines we talked about. They're real good for desert warfare."

Billy Carter also disputed published reports that he acknowledged to federal investigators — but later denied — discussing with former CIA agent Francis Terpil a deal to sell machine guns to the Libyans.

Billy Carter acknowledged meeting Terpil in a crowded grandstand during a parade in Tripoli in 1979. But he denied discussing arms shipments with him, adding that he didn't even know who the man was until he was shown a photograph of him later by the Justice Department.

"This whole thing is getting so ridiculous that I don't want to comment on it," Billy Carter said, laughing at the latest in a series of accusations published since the onset of the investigation.

Billy also turned aside an accusation by an associate, Jack McGregor, in a New York Times article that a proposed deal to provide additional Libyan oil allotments to Charter Oil Co. of Jacksonville, Fla., was first suggested by a Libyan political officer named Ahmed Shahati.

The article suggested that the arrangement was proposed to repay Carter for any future assistance he might provide the Libyans.

"Jack McGregor was not in Libya with me and knows nothing about my discussions with Mr. Shahati. That's not true," Carter said.

He also declined comment on published statements by state Sen. Floyd Hudgins, who said the president's brother drank vodka frequently on their 1978 trip to Libya and boasted to him and other business associates about his influence there.

Billy fended off questions as well about the effects of his dealings on his brother's re-election chances. But he defended his contacts with the Libyans, saying he first traveled to the country in 1978 "because I had never been there before . . . I had good intentions. It was a good trip and I enjoyed it."

Ex-CIA Agent Facing Trial In Case Related to Libya

He Says He's Not In Photo With Billy

By Allan Frank
Washington Star Staff Writer

U.S. District Judge John H. Pratt yesterday set Nov. 5 as the trial date for Francis E. Terpil, an international arms dealer from McLean who is criminally charged with acting as an unregistered foreign agent for Libya, conspiracy to commit murder and other serious alleged crimes.

Pratt granted a delay in the case, which had been scheduled for early October, to allow attorneys to complete other cases already scheduled and to prepare additional motions in the case.

William J. Garber, one of Terpil's attorneys, told the judge, "The more I get into it, the more issues surface," referring to the multiplicity of charges against his client and the complicated defense that is expected to be presented.

Terpil and a fellow ex-CIA employee, Edwin P. Wilson, were indicted in April here on charges of acting as unregistered foreign agents for Libya, conspiracy to commit murder, solicitation to commit murder, aiding and abetting, conspiracy to transport explosives in foreign commerce, transportation of explosives in foreign commerce, with intent to use unlawfully, unlawful export of U.S. munitions and unlawful transportation of hazardous materials in foreign commerce.

Jerome Brower, a California explosives firm executive, also was charged with making false declarations to a grand jury in an alleged effort to conceal the purpose of the alleged conspiracy.

The federal indictment charged that "the object of the conspiracy was to supply covertly and for a profit the government of Libya with personnel, explosives, explosive material and other goods necessary to make explosive devices and to teach others how to make explosives in a terrorist training project."

The alleged conspirators plotted in mid-1976, the indictment charges, to hire an American assassin for $1 million to kill Umar Abdullah Mu-hayshi, a former member of the Libyan ruling council who had defected to Egypt.

Since being arrested in New York last December on state weapons charges, Terpil has been involved in another controversy over whether he was seated next to Billy Carter at an observance in Libya last year.

Terpil admits attending the 10th anniversary celebration of the Libyan revolution last year, but denies he sat next to Billy Carter in the reviewing stand at the affair.

At least one federal investigator familiar with the Billy Carter case insists the man seated to Billy Carter's right in a photograph of spectators is Terpil. The photograph was published in this week's issue of Time magazine.

Terpil says he is not the man in the picture.

In an interview with The Washington Star yesterday, Terpil said, "I know that according to the government that is me in that picture. That is not me."

He declines to comment about whether he has ever talked with Billy Carter.

In January, Billy Carter told Richard Mortlock, a reporter for a nationally distributed weekly tabloid, The Star, "I don't know the guy. . . . Sure, I must have shook hands with him, but I shook about 5,000 hands that day. I must have shifted seats about a dozen times that day."

Kenneth Michael Robinson, one of Terpil's attorneys, also declines to comment about whether his client has ever met Billy Carter. But Robinson says that long before recent news stories about Billy Carter, Terpil was "saying a lot to us about Billy Carter and his Libyan connections."

Terpil's trial is expected to last two weeks. However, lawyers on both sides have noted that complex motions involving potential disclosures of intelligence information could cause delays.

Robinson said, "If we get this thing moved into January for trial, you have to stay tuned because Billy Carter is definitely involved as far as moving in the same circles on this whole Libyan thing involving Terpil. Billy Carter's name will very much be a presence in the Terpil trial."

E. Lawrence Barcella Jr., the assistant U.S. attorney prosecuting the case in Washington against Terpil and Wilson, says, "I've looked at him (Terpil) many times, and I've looked at the picture. It's somewhat difficult to tell if it is the same guy."

"Some people say, 'Yes, that's Frank,'" Barcella said. "Some say it's not. . . . It is tough (to identify him from the Time magazine picture) for a couple of reasons: it is somewhat of a distant shot and it is taken from his left side. Some of the so-called identifying characteristics are concealed. His ears are covered mostly by hair."

Both Terpil and a close friend of his, who asked not to be quoted by name, note that the man in the picture is wearing what appears to be a silver watch with a dark leather band while Terpil has a gold Rolex with a gold band.

The close friend, an ex-CIA employee who says he has known Terpil for two years, added that Terpil appears to have less hair than the man in the picture with Billy Carter that appeared in Time. (At his request, Terpil brushed his hair before his picture was taken yesterday by The Washington Star.)

Several intelligence sources shown the picture in Time Magazine were uncertain whether the man to the right of Billy Carter is Terpil.

Barcella adds, "It's really not that big a deal whether or not it's Frank, in a sense — the fact that he is sitting next to Billy Carter."

Barcella and other Justice Department officials decline to comment on whether they have attempted to learn if there was any contact between Billy Carter and Terpil or Wilson.

The Washington prosecutor notes, however, that "there is no comparison between the two (Wilson and Terpil) and the alleged activities they are charged with being involved in and the activities that Billy is charged with being involved in."

Terpil expects his Libyan connections and the question of the picture will pique enough curiosity for one of the congressional panels investigating Billy Carter's Libyan deals to subpoena him as a witness.

Billy Told Of Meeting Arms Dealer

He Later Denied Contact Took Place

By Allan Frank
Washington Star Staff Writer

Billy Carter told Justice Department investigators that he knew international arms dealer Francis E. Terpil, currently under indictment here and in New York, and had been asked by Terpil to help export machine guns. The Washington Star has learned.

Although Billy Carter also said in January that he had been contacted in Americus, Ga., by Terpil about the machine gun deal, the president's brother two months later denied any knowledge of Terpil, several congressmen and other sources familiar with Justice Department records told The Washington Star.

On March 20, during a telephone conversation with Joel S. Lisker, chief of the Justice Department's foreign agent registration unit, Billy Carter denied having any knowledge of Terpil. But during a Jan. 16 interview he had identified the arms dealer as the man sitting at his right in a picture taken of the parade review stand at the 10th anniversary celebration of the Libyan revolution in Benghazi, Libya.

During an interview with The Washington Star Monday, Terpil acknowledged that he was at the Libyan 10th anniversary and said, "no comment," when asked if he had met Billy Carter.

The late editions of Tuesday's Washington Star carried new pictures of Terpil and the Sept. 1, 1979, picture taken by Michael and Aubine Kirtley of Billy Carter in the parade review stand. Kirtley yesterday said he had initially incorrectly identified the photo, which appears in this week's issue of Time, as having been taken in Tripoli, rather than Benghazi.

Terpil Monday denied he was the man in that Kirtley photo, the same one that had run in the November 1979 issue of Life and was used by Justice Department investigators when they asked Billy Carter on Jan. 16 about Terpil.

In late January, Billy Carter told a national tabloid that while in the reviewing stand he "must have shifted seats a dozen times that day."

After the pictures of Terpil ran in The Washington Star, sources from the Middle East said they believed the man sitting next to Billy Carter was more likely to be Amhed Jibril, who is secretary general of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine General Command, the so-called "rejectionist front" of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Neither Terpil nor Billy Carter was available for comment yesterday.

Terpil faces trial here on federal charges related to allegations that he conspired at Libya's request in 1976 to assassinate a former Libyan politician exiled in Egypt. He also is scheduled to be tried in New York for trying to sell 10,000 machine guns and ammunition to undercover agents.

The Justice Department's foreign agents registration unit informed the U.S. attorney's office here, during its investigation of Terpil, of the statements about the arms merchant from Billy Carter and his Georgia friends.

Several Justice Department sources have indicated that they tend to discount any suggestions of strong ties or friendship between Billy Carter and Terpil, especially because the proposed machine gun deal never went through.

A Justice Department source said, "In a later interview, Billy said that we had misunderstood what he had said, and Joel Lisker believes that it is quite possible that we misunderstood." The source did not elaborate.

House Judiciary Committee member Harold Sawyer, R-Mich., said that the Justice Department files show that Billy Carter said in January that Terpil had approached him, and perhaps several of his friends from Georgia who had accompanied him to Libya, and "asked them if Billy could get a fairly significant quantity of machine guns for them."

"The FBI report," Sawyer said, indicated that Terpil asked Billy Carter " 'Could they get a large number of machine guns, a lot of machine guns?' "

Acknowledging that he wasn't certain about all the details, Sawyer added that the FBI write-up of January interviews with Billy Carter and several of his associates said that Terpil "had made this request to Billy and Billy had said he'd see what he could do for him, or something like that". Subsequently, Billy totally denied that."

Rep. Harold L. Volkmer, D-Mo., also a House Judiciary Committee member, suggested that Terpil made contact with one of Billy Carter's friends, such as Henry Randolph Coleman, rather than directly with the president's brother.

Another source said that in January, "Billy says he met Frank Terpil in Libya and evidently sat beside him in a parade over there. He then goes on and makes the statement that Terpil got a hold of him down in Americus, Ga. and proposed to him a deal on a sale of machine guns to Libya, but that nothing ever came of it. . . . Then on March 20, Billy tells Lisker that he didn't even make that statement back in January. He all of a sudden has become very sensitive on Terpil."

The Americans Who Are Training And Supplying Libyan Terrorists

By Stephen Kurkjian
And Ben Bradlee Jr.

AS A GREEN BERET, he was accustomed to clandestine assignments in exotic places. But this was different.

Before, whether in Southeast Asia or the Dominican Republic, he'd always known that he was working for the United States. But now he was in Libya, an avowed enemy of the United States, working for its terrorist-prone military.

He had been in Tripoli less than a week when he was first taken to see the base of operations for the group he had joined. With another American at the wheel, they drove about 20 miles south of their luxury seaside hotel until the sandy stretches of North African desert gave way to a lush orange grove. The car stopped at the end of the grove in front of the palace of the former king of Libya, who had been ousted in 1969 by Muammar Qaddafi, the Libyan leader.

Behind a set of locked doors in the basement of the servants' quarters was located, in effect, a small American munitions factory, stocked with explosives shipped from the United States. There a group of Americans was busy camouflaging small bombs as lamps, candles, briefcases and ashtrays.

The Green Beret, who less than 10 days earlier had been going through routine Army drills at Fort Bragg, N.C., was now part of an ongoing operation which, from 1976 through at least 1979, is alleged to have provided terrorist training and explosives for the Libyan government.

At its simplest, this story tells how a growing band of mercenaries, many of them Americans, sold their daring and special knowledge to the highest bidder — in this instance, the forces of international terrorism. But some of the Americans involved in the Libyan project — including the Green Beret who was given a leave of absence by his superiors to take part in the operation — are convinced that the U.S. government knew full well what they were doing, and may have let it continue longer than it should have, in hopes of infiltrating the international terrorist movement. Qaddafi, after all, has openly financed such groups as the Palestine Liberation Organization, Italy's Red Brigades, the Irish Republican Army, the Japanese Red Army, Germany's Baader-Meinhoff gang, and others.

Even more troubling to the State Department is what Americans may still be doing in Libya today.

At present, according to State Department intelligence, there are more than a dozen, and perhaps as many as 50, Americans — not necessarily connected to the Americans in the following report — in Libya providing military support to the government.

State Department sources fear that some Americans may have had a hand in training the Libyan commandos believed responsible for last year's execution of 11 Libyan exiles living in Europe.

Potentially more damaging is the indication from State Department sources that the Libyans have suddenly shown a "certain sophisticated awareness of U.S. intelligence capabilities and the nature of U.S. operations worldwide." It is another indication that U.S.-trained mercenaries are selling their skills and knowledge abroad.

The problem of the involvement of Americans in supporting international terrorists "is much greater than recognized," according to other federal investigators. On the first page of one confidential report, the officials wrote:

"The United States, in effect, has become a major supplier of [military] hardware and technology in support of worldwide terrorism. Former Central Intelligence Agency personnel, military Special Forces personnel, and U.S. corporations combine to supply products and expertise to whomever can pay the price."

There is little doubt that the project the Green Beret found himself involved in was a scheme hatched by two former Central Intelligence Agency employees, Edwin P. Wilson and Francis F. Terpil, who used their expertise to design a program that supplied explosives and people to train terrorists in Libya.

Undercutting the participants' speculation that the United States sanctioned Wilson's and Terpil's activities is the fact that when one of the first Americans recruited for the Libyan affair informed the CIA of the operation in September 1976, the agency notified the FBI. On the other hand, the operation continued at least until late December 1979, according to a federal investigators' report — more than three years after the FBI investigation was begun.

Up to that point, federal investigators now allege:

- More than 20 Americans, including five former CIA employees, a Green Beret on leave, five ex-Green Berets, five former Army explosives experts and two civilian naval engineers, were flown to Libya to perform a wide variety of support activities for Qaddafi's military.

- Some of the Americans were put to work camouflaging terrorist bombs while others trained Libyan commandos in everything from bomb detonation to parachute jumping.

- And the shipping to Libya of millions of dollars' worth of military hardware, including 25,000 pounds of explosives and a ground-to-air Red-eye missile, was contracted for without the required approval of the State Department. The Libyans willingly paid the enormous, marked-up prices that their American suppliers charged for the hardware.

Last spring, Terpil and Wilson were indicted by a federal grand jury in Washington in connection with their Libyan dealings. Neither man appeared for trial and both are believed to have fled the country. A third man, Jerome S. Brower, head of a California explosives supply firm, was also indicted in the Libyan scheme. He pleaded guilty in December to a charge of conspiracy to violate federal arms transportation laws and is cooperating with the government while he awaits sentencing.

Terpil could not be located for an interview, and Brower refused any comment. Wilson, reached by phone in Tripoli, would say only that he is "an American businessman here on business"; he refused to speak about his past or present dealings in Libya.

styles of living were almost exactly opposites.

Terpil, 41, was born in Brooklyn and retained the tough look and swagger of the New York streets. He boasted of his work for the CIA, and although some people knew it wasn't true, Terpil would allude to covert operations in Latin America as if he had participated in them.

But by most accounts, Terpil was actually one of the agency's lesser lights. According to sources, he repaired code-breaking equipment until he was fired in 1971, reportedly for failing to keep the low profile expected of CIA agents.

By contrast, Wilson, an imposing figure standing about 6 feet 5 and weighing 240 pounds, epitomized the finest in Washington manners. A member of the Georgetown and University clubs, he fit in comfortably with congressmen, businessmen, and Pentagon and CIA executives, many of whom he invited out to his $6 million, 3,000-acre Fauquier County estate for weekends of hunting, horseback riding and barbecues.

Wilson joined the CIA some time after serving in the Korean War as a Marine. While his exact duties with the agency are not known, two sources familiar with his work identified him as involved in two important '60s covert operations: the sprawling, post-Bay of Pigs, anti-Castro operation based in Miami code-named JM Wave; and the search for the Cuban revolutionary leader Che Guevara in Bolivia in 1967.

Sometime in 1971, Wilson left the CIA and spent five years working for the U.S. Navy's Task Force 157, a highly secret spy group created to carry on covert operations internationally.

Wilson's work involved running one of the four or five companies ("proprietaries") used to pay agents in the field and ship support equipment to them.

Wilson's involvement with the task force was suddenly terminated, however, in April 1976, when he indiscreetly approached Adm. Bobby Ray Inman, then director of naval intelligence, with a business proposition: If Inman would channel Navy contracts to Wilson's private company, Wilson would lobby his congressional contacts to assist Inman in having Congress approve his budget requests. In addition, Wilson proposed that Inman consider disbanding Task Force 157 as it was then structured and setting up a new operation with Wilson in charge.

According to federal officials, Inman, who went on to become director of the National Security Agency before recently accepting President Reagan's appointment as deputy director of the CIA, was "astounded" by Wilson's proposals. He immediately informed the FBI of the conversation, ordered that Wilson be fired from Task Force 157, and, a short time later, recommended that the entire organization be dissolved.

According to reports by the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms as well as numerous interviews with both federal officials and participants in the Libyan operation, the scheme worked this way:

In the spring of 1976, Terpil and Wilson traveled to Pomona, Calif., to meet with Brower, who, besides being a federally licensed explosives manufacturer, was also a member of a congressional explosives advisory panel.

Brower, 61, agreed in principle to supply Terpil and Wilson with the explosives they needed to satisfy a contract with the Libyan government, authorities assert.

Federal investigators say that it was through Terpil's contacts in Britain that the Libyan deal was obtained. Terpil, who owns a town house in London, was introduced at a party to Qaddafi's cousin, Sayid Qaddafi, then the chief buyer of sophisticated electronic equipment for the Libyan army.

On Aug. 13, 1976, Terpil, Wilson, Brower and several others met in Washington at the offices of Inter-technology Inc., a new Terpil-Wilson company. There, officials allege, the three formally agreed to ship quantities of explosives to Libya without securing the requisite State Department approval. Authorities refer to this session as the conspiracy meeting.

The same day, Brower's company in California, J.S. Brower and Associates, shipped the first load of explosives to Tripoli, according to reports. They were packed in black 50-gallon drums marked "Industrial Solvent."

A short time later, Wilson and Terpil began sending recruits to Libya to implement the personnel training and explosive manufacturing provisions of their agreement with Qaddafi. Among them were John H. Harper, a retired CIA ordnance technician, and his son, John Jr., both of Virginia, who helped set up the explosive manufacturing plant in the Libyan palace complex. Later, the younger Harper told investigators that during his three-week stay in Libya, for which he was paid $7,000, he constructed 25 concealed bombs.

However, he said he and his father abandoned the project because they "knew [the bombs] were for terrorist use and innocent lives would be lost."

Douglas M. Schlacter of Upper-ville, Va., a friend and business associate of Wilson's, was also recruited during the early stages of the operation. Unlike the Harpers, he remained in Libya, for the most part acting as Wilson's and Terpil's go-between with the other Americans as they arrived.

Apparently dissatisfied with the explosives manufacturing done in Libya by the Harpers, Wilson prevailed upon Brower to recruit other operatives. Brower found four men, all from the West Coast. Two of them, Robert E. Swallow and Dennis J. Wilson, were engineers assigned to the China Lake Naval Weapons Station, a remote installation in California's Mojave Desert that conducts top-secret research in the development of new weapons systems for the United States.

Swallow and Wilson took leaves from China Lake to go to Libya. When their work was done in Libya, they returned to their jobs at China Lake.

Another of the West Coast recruits, who agreed to a telephone interview on the condition that his name not be used, said he went to Libya as a favor to Brower and because he thought he was participating in a CIA operation. However, nothing explicitly indicating agency involvement was mentioned to him.

"They [Terpil and Wilson] said not to worry, because they had it covered," the recruit said.

After being briefed by Wilson in Washington, the four men flew to Libya, where Schlacter picked them up and drove them to what he said would be their operations center, the palace of the former king. Adjoining the palace was a smaller building, which had been the servants' quarters. This was where the Americans actually built the bombs.

Terpil, Wilson and Brower each made a few visits to Tripoli during the time he was there, according to the source. He said Wilson offered him a raise and asked him to stay on. But he had had more than enough and couldn't wait to get home.

"I regret the whole thing," the West Coast recruit said. "I wish I'd never heard of Wilson and Terpil. I think they're out plowing up a whole bunch of cash and not afraid of who they have to step on to do it . . . But there's still a question in my mind as to the role of the CIA. No one's ever answered that question. How do you check out something like that? Even if you ask the right people, you're going to get the wrong answer."

According to the federal reports, on the evening of July 21, 1977, Luke F. Thompson, a Green Beret master sergeant at Fort Bragg, received a phone call in his Fayetteville, N.C., home from a man identifying himself as Pat Loomis.

Loomis and another man, it turns out, had been fired from the CIA by agency director Stansfield Turner less than three months before for allegedly assisting Wilson in buying explosive devices bound for Libya, devices that could only legally be purchased by the U.S. government.

Thompson later told federal authorities that Loomis asked him if he would be available to recruit and head a four-man team to undertake an assignment overseas for which Special Forces skills would be required.

The following day, Thompson called Loomis to say that he and a group of four ex-Green Berets he had previously served with would be available. Loomis asked to meet Thompson and his team at the Fayetteville Sheraton.

Before this meeting, one of the recruits, nervous that Loomis might be an agent provocateur for a hostile foreign power, informed military intelligence officials at Fort Bragg of the overture.

"I was told they had checked the operation out and there was nothing wrong with it," said the Green Beret, who agreed to an interview recently on the condition that his name not be revealed. "I assumed that they meant I was going to do a job for the Agency."

To participate in the project, the Green Beret asked for and was immediately granted a 30-day leave.

Recalls the Green Beret source: "Loomis began by saying: 'My name is Pat Loomis and I'm with the CIA. I've just come out of deep cover in the aircraft industry in Indonesia. I don't know any of you people. One man here has been thoroughly investigated. I don't know the rest of you and I don't want to know you.'"

Loomis told the men they would be paid $4,500 a month plus a $15,000 bonus at the end of the year. He would provide no further details of the mission, insisting that that information would have to be given outside the country.

A few days later the group went to Washington, where a woman (who turned out to be Loomis' wife) provided them with passports. Inside each one was $1,000 in cash but no visas, according to the source.

It was not until the following morning, when Pat Loomis handed them their plane tickets, that the Green Berets learned they were bound for Tripoli, via Zurich. Loomis said they would have no trouble spotting their contact because he was a tall man who would be wearing a red suit and a gold Rolex watch. At the Zurich airport, Ed Wilson was instantly recognizable to them.

After arriving in Libya the group was introduced to the chief of Libyan intelligence, Abdul Senussi, also a member of the country's Revolutionary Council.

Over mint tea, Senussi began telling the Americans of a problem he had with Egypt. A group of about 800 Egyptian soldiers had apparently crossed the border into Libya and had to be driven back. He was interested in any U.S. expertise on how best to accomplish this. Senussi suggested the Americans devise a gas that could put the Egyptians to sleep. When the Americans politely scoffed at this idea, Senussi abruptly ended the meeting.

The Green Berets checked into a plush, beachfront hotel, where all their accommodations had been prepaid by the Libyan government. They were given a list of stores at which they could simply sign for anything they wanted. Cars were made available, and they were given Libyan driver's licenses. Guards with machine guns were stationed outside their hotel room doors.

Two days later, Schlacter reappeared at the hotel, seemingly in a hurry. He ordered the group to get ready quickly for another meeting with Senussi, the intelligence chief.

Senussi directed the Green Berets to establish a terrorist training program for Libya's commandos.

"At this point," the Green Beret source recalled, "it became clear to me that we were working for hostile foreign intelligence."

Concerned that they were now totally at the mercy of the Libyans, whom they did not trust, the source said he and the other Green Berets formulated "escape and evasion" plans in case they had to get out of the country quickly.

Because it was too soon to leave without arousing suspicion, the Green Beret source said that he and his team spent most of the next three weeks in their hotel rooms mapping out a comprehensive terrorist training program.

After a month, he said, he approached Schlacter and, citing pressing personal business at home, told him he would have to return to the United States. Schlacter offered no argument and, within a few hours, presented him with a round-trip airline ticket.

On his return to the United States, the Green Beret was extensively debriefed by military intelligence personnel at Fort Bragg. Then, apparently wanting reassurance that the Libyan operation was in fact legitimate, Fort Bragg officials decided to call in the FBI.

In a telephone interview, Robert H. Caverly, then a resident agent for the bureau in Fayetteville but now retired, said he told Fort Bragg military officials he would seek "clarification" from the Justice Department to determine if it was a CIA operation. But the clarification from Washington never came.

The Green Beret began receiving anonymous telephoned threats, warning him to stop talking to the authorities. As a precaution, military officials moved him from Fort Bragg to the Naval Special Warfare Department in Little Creek, Va., where he served as an "unconventional warfare adviser."

His superiors at Fort Bragg, he said, ordered him to continue participating in the operation — without returning to Tripoli. Following their instructions, the Green Beret agreed to act as the operation's supply officer in the United States, and he recruited three more ex-Green Berets to go to Libya.

Requests for supplies were sent to him in code. Among the supplies he provided in at least two large shipments were technical training manuals and military boots. Fort Bragg military officials carefully catalogued the items before they were sent to Loomis, who then forwarded them on to Tripoli.

As his involvement in the Libyan affair began to wind down, the Green Beret source said he learned that Wilson had been subpoenaed to testify in Washington before a federal grand jury that was investigating his dealings with Libya. In February 1978, the source received his own subpoena.

A few days before his appearance, he visited CIA headquarters at his own request, looking for "guidance" as to how much he should tell the grand jury. Ushered into an office in the clandestine operations section, the source said he was introduced to an official who told him that since the Libyan operation had nothing to do with the CIA, he was free to tell the grand jury anything he wished. The Green Beret's skepticism remained, however.

"I've been lied to by the agency," the source said.

"I'm only speculating," he concluded, "but I believe Ed Wilson was turned loose to get a handle on Libya. He was allowed to establish a very profitable private enterprise with a co-allegiance to the CIA. We were the low-paid infiltrators. We were expendable."

Federal prosecutors say that today both Terpil and Wilson are the targets of international manhunts. Terpil is believed to be hiding in either Libya or Syria (which do not have extradition treaties with the United States). Wilson, on the other hand, was spotted and briefly detained last August in Malta, where he owns a villa.

According to Assistant U.S. Attorney E. Lawrence Barcella, the American consulate in Malta was notified by local police and told a meeting would be set up shortly to arrange deportation of Wilson to the United States. However, at a hearing on Aug. 28, a police inspector informed the court magistrate that Wilson had been released from jail the night before and placed on a commercial flight to London. Although Maltese authorities had taken Wilson's passport, by the time he stepped off the plane at London's Heathrow Airport, he had another one to get through customs.

Barcella is tight-lipped about the slipup in Malta. "We've never gotten a satisfactory explanation from Malta about what happened," he said recently. "I don't know if we'll ever get another chance at him like that."

Like the plot of a John Le Carré spy novel, the saga of fugitive arms dealers Frank Terpil and George Gregory Korkala has taken another new twist, with the U.S. State Department checking a report that Korkala may have met with foul play in Amsterdam recently.

Terpil is a flamboyant former Central Intelligence Agency officer who has been trying — even in absentia — to help his good friend, deposed Ugandan dictator Idi Amin, return to power.

There had been reports from his family and others that indicated he may have intended to come home in mid-February and turn government witness against other international weapons merchants.

Korkala, says one source, has failed to check in recently with the one person who has always been able to contact him since he fled the country last September to avoid facing trial on charges of training terrorists, selling guns and exporting high-powered explosives.

Former Head of Explosives

By Laura A. Kiernan
Washington Post Staff Writer

The former president of a California-based explosives firm, who admitted that he conspired with two former CIA employees to supply weapons and training to a school for terrorists in Libya, was sentenced yesterday in U.S. District Court to serve four months in prison.

Assistant U.S. Attorney E. Lawrence Barcella said in court yesterday that a federal grand jury is currently investigating information that the defendant, Jerome S. Brower of Pomona, Calif., also helped ship 40,000 pounds of highly powerful plastic explosives to Libya in the fall of 1977.

Barcella told Judge John H. Pratt that, it is believed to be the largest nonmilitary shipment of plastic explosives out of the United States now known to federal officials.

Brower, 61, allegedly purchased the plastic explosives and assisted in arranging for shipment to Libya, Barcella told Pratt. Federal law prohibits the shipment of such explosives on commercial or cargo aircraft, as well as exporting it without required permits and selling it to specified countries, including Libya.

Law enforcement officials learned specifics about that shipment after a grand jury last April indicted Brower and the two former CIA employees, Edwin P. Wilson and Frank E. Terpil, on charges that the Libyan government hired them to run a secret terrorist training school there.

Brower pleaded guilty last December to conspiracy to violate various federal arms transportation laws. In addition to the four-month prison term, Pratt placed Brower on three years probation and ordered him to pay a $5,000 fine. Brower has been cooperating with federal officials investigating the case.

Wilson, 51, who lived with his family on a huge farm in Upperville, Va., is a fugitive believed to be living in a villa in Tripoli, Libya. The United States does not have an extradition treaty with Libya, making that country a safe haven for Wilson while he faces criminal charges in the United States.

Terpil, who lived in McLean, had pleaded not guilty to the charges following the indictment but then failed to show up for his trial in New York last September on unrelated charges that Terpil and a codefendant tried to sell 10,000 machine guns to police undercover agents there. Prosecutors believe that Terpil left the United States and is now traveling in the Middle East.

The government has alleged that Brower's role was to help Wilson and Terpil meet the terms of a contract they had with the Libyan government in 1976. In its indictment last April, the grand jury said that in addition to supplying weapons and training, Terpil and Wilson also recruited an American citizen in 1976 to assassinate a Libyan ex-patriot who a year earlier had been involved in an unsuccessful plot to overthrow the government of Libyan leader Col. Muammar Qaddafi. The assassination attempt described by the grand jury was never carried out.

JACK ANDERSON*Idi Amin's Role in the Hostage Crisis

One of the most bizarre footnotes to the Iranian hostage crisis was the intercession of exiled Ugandan dictator Idi Amin on behalf of the imprisoned Americans.

The brutal Amin is an unlikely peacemaker. Yet, in an unsolicited statement from exile, he volunteered to intervene as a mediator to free the hostages from Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's clutches. The offer came to nothing and was quickly forgotten.

But I can now report the even more bizarre origins of Amin's cameo appearance in the hostage drama. Amin was led on by an American con man and gunrunner named Frank Terpil, who had supplied Amin with military equipment and was conspiring with him to arrange a triumphant return to Uganda.

This was the deal: If Amin would appeal to Khomeini for release of the American hostages, Terpil would see that Amin's 24 children were allowed to come to the United States. This would also make more palatable Amin's efforts to overthrow the government that had driven him from Uganda.

Terpil had no authority to make deals for the U.S. government. Far from it. He was under federal indictment for illegal munitions traffic with Libya. In any event, Amin's appeal to Khomeini was a flop, and Terpil fled the United States to avoid prosecution.

The weird attempt by the indicted gunrunner and the exiled dictator to cash in on the hostage situation was known to U.S. officials. The telephone Terpil used to call Amin in Saudi Arabia late last summer was tapped. My associates Indy Badhwar and Dale Van Atta have obtained a tape of the recorded conversation.

The expansive Terpil was free with advice and promises. He even offered to help Amin return to Uganda. And Amin sounded confident that his comeback would be as easy and triumphant as Napoleon's return from Elba.

"We have got leaders ready waiting, less than 400 miles away," Amin boasted. "We are not worried about what type of army they have inside there."

Amin instructed Terpil to tell his presumed congressional and U.N. contacts that Amin's primary goal in returning to Uganda was "trying to stop the communists." Terpil promised to "leak the information to the right people here."

"And what I want from your people there is . . . a loan if you could put it down," Amin went on. He would need money, he explained, to get Uganda back on its feet.

"Is the football team ready, though?" Terpil asked.

Amin: "The football team are inside."

Terpil: "They have all the equipment?"

Amin: "They have complete equipment with them. They don't need any supplies."

Terpil: "That's good. Everybody is just about ready."

The two men closed their conversation with some banter about one of the dictator's favorite movies, "The Dirty Dozen."

Amin: "They can rescue somebody, these boys. One dozen."

Terpil: "Maybe we can make a dozen ourselves. We need some key people. We need some commandos. We'll train our own commandos." They both laughed.

As it happened, Amin's comeback attempt was a fiasco. A month after the taped conversation, about 1,000 of the cocky ex-dictator's troops invaded northern Uganda. They were routed after capturing four or five villages.

Four color maps of the United States show the current temperatures and weather conditions across the country, and the next day's forecasts. "How else would I know what to wear when I step off the plane?" one congressman asked.

The renegade CIA

The Sunday Times

LONDON — The man who strolled off the midnight flight from Malta into London's Heathrow Airport on Sunday, Aug. 24, was hard to miss. Six feet four inches tall and weighing in at about 230 pounds, he looked a tough customer.

Just how tough, the official who glanced at his passport and immigration form was not to know. No one at Heathrow had been alerted that Edwin Wilson, renegade CIA agent, mastermind of international terrorism and one of the two men most wanted by the FBI for gun-running and attempted assassination, was about to slip into Britain.

Scotland Yard has confirmed it missed the chance of arresting Wilson that night because of a communication "problem."

What actually happened was that the Maltese authorities who hustled Wilson out of their country failed to inform the British foreign office until just about the time Wilson was due to arrive.

When they learned what had happened, the FBI in Washington was outraged. This was the best opportunity it had had in three years to break a formidable terrorist ring run by Wilson and another ex-CIA agent, Frank Terpil.

Gun running

This pair are, the FBI believes, behind a series of violent international terrorist exploits over the past few years that include:

□ Gun-running for former Ugandan dictator Idi Amin and Libya's President Moammar Qaddafi.

□ Training Qaddafi's "hit-squad" which has been responsible for several recent assassinations in Europe.

□ Helping arrange the murder of Bruce Mackenzie, the trusted British adviser to the late Kenyan president, Jomo Kenyatta.

□ Attempting to assassinate a Libyan defector in Cairo.

But, in addition to these, it has been learned that Wilson and Terpil were involved in an extraordinary mercenary raid carried out on behalf of Qaddafi against French forces in the sub-Saharan state of Chad.

Forces backed by Qaddafi have subsequently triumphed in that country's civil war.

Although Ed Wilson, now 50, is 10 years older than Frank Terpil, the two men seemed made for each other. Both had operated on the murkier fringes of the CIA's covert operations — Terpil in the Middle East and East Pakistan (now Bangladesh), Wilson in CIA operations from the Bay of Pigs to Viet Nam. Both had a distinctly cavalier attitude to the rules which governed their profession.

Wilson: A formidable build

Methods too rough

Terpil's CIA career came to a sudden end in 1971 when he was fired — "terminated unfavorably" was the official phrase, because, according to associates, his methods were too rough even for that hardball organization.

His experience in the agency was, however, helpful in smoothing his move into the world of international business consulting.

His firm, Oceanic International Corporation, an export-import marketing concern, sent Terpil all over the world to pick up seemingly innocent orders for fire engines, electrical generators and musical instruments.

Terpil: Huge illegal arms deals

On the side, however, he became adept at arranging huge illegal arms deals.

Most of them were initially with Idi Amin's notorious secret police and they involved some highly specialized equipment, including attache cases fitted with tape recorders, remote-controlled detonators and instruments of torture.

Terpil's contacts widened, almost inevitably, to include Amin's friend and backer, President Qaddafi of Libya, and for much of the '70s he supplied arms and sophisticated electronic equipment to both leaders. He advised Amin on international security and oversaw the training of Qaddafi's hit-squads, set up to eliminate "enemies of the revolution."

Terpil's base was a large $300,000 townhouse on Connecticut Ave., Washington, and he owned another lavish house built in the Japanese style near the CIA's headquarters in Langley, Va., which allowed him to maintain contact with his ex-colleagues in the agency.

One of these was Ed Wilson. He, too, had had a colorful career. Following his undercover work in Viet Nam he was one of the last CIA men to be evacuated from Saigon in 1975.

Physically, at least, Wilson had been well-suited to his tasks as an agent. Apart from his formidable build, he was a judo black belt and an expert in hand-to-hand combat.

Shortly after the Viet Nam debacle, Wilson, too, left the CIA and joined forces with Terpil.

Their association with Qaddafi, however, depended on a reliable linkman, and, in the early '70s, Terpil found him. He was Sayed Gadafadam, until 1978 first secretary in the Libyan embassy in London, and now head of the Libyan secret service.

London became their contact point, and the three men met there frequently to discuss deals.

Gadafadam was Libya's chief buyer of sophisticated electronic equipment for the Libyan army.

Lucrative trade

The trade was lucrative; U.S. investigators figure that between 1976 and 1978 Wilson and Terpil supplied Qaddafi with more than $3 million worth of equipment.

It was inevitable that sooner or later the Wilson-Terpil operation should come to the attention of U.S. federal authorities. In 1975, the FBI began tracking Terpil's movements when he bought several cases of Ingram machine guns from a well-known arms dealer in Powder Springs, Ga.

The FBI was particularly interested since export of the guns — and much of Terpil's and Wilson's other weaponry — from the U.S. is illegal without government permits.

But, because the volume of their arms and devices was small, the FBI deduced that Terpil and Wilson were able to smuggle the equipment out of the U.S. in suitcases accompanying them on their frequent flights to London.

The most detailed information the FBI collected concerned Qaddafi's abortive plot in 1976 to murder Umar Abdullah Muhayshi, a senior figure in the Libyan revolutionary council who defected to Cairo.

In August, 1976, at Terpil's home in Virginia, Terpil and Wilson hired a professional assassin (whose name is being withheld by the FBI) for $1 million with a $30,000 advance.

The assassination failed but intelligence sources have not given the reason — if, indeed, they know it.

What are known, however, are details of the most spectacular — and so far unrevealed — operation yet mounted by the Wilson-Terpil team. In 1978, Wilson held a clandestine meeting to discuss a planned coup by Qaddafi against the neighboring desert state of Chad. The fee which the Libyan leader was proposing for the job was $450,000.

The plot Qaddafi suggested was an Entebbe-style raid on Chad's main airbase at Ndjamena, the country's key military communications point. Once again, the contact man was Sayed Gadafadam.

Using contacts in Brussels, Wilson recruited a hard and resourceful team of French mercenaries and got them to buy a battered old cargo DC-3. On the morning of July 28, 1978, the plane, with French markings, took off from Sicily and set a course for the Italian mainland.

The man at the controls, wave-hopping to avoid radar detection, was Roland Raucoules, 45, nicknamed "Sebastopol," a veteran mercenary and former member of the right-wing OAS French terrorist organization.

Known as one of the most experienced ferry pilots in Africa, he managed to guide the plane to the southern Libyan airbase.

Sandstorm snag

There the mercenaries took on board 40 pro-Libyan commandos from Chad and set off for the capital, Ndjamena. On the night of the raid, however, a sandstorm blew up and by the time the DC-3 reached its target, conditions were so bad that it was forced to turn back.

Raucoules managed to fly the plane back to Libya through the storm, but the mission had to be aborted — to the fury of Qaddafi, who promptly arrested the three mercenaries.

By now the FBI was getting closer to its men. In December, 1979 Terpil was arrested in New York. Released on bail, he disappeared from his Virginia home.

Wilson has never been arrested, so the FBI was delighted to hear that he had been detained by the Maltese government last August.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has asked for an investigation into a report that Americans trained in terrorist techniques are selling their skills and knowledge to Libya and other countries.

It said that between 1976 and 1979 some Americans who provided terrorist training and explosives to the Libyan government are convinced that the U.S. government was aware of their activities.

A Gathering of 'Merchants of Death'

It was Sept. 23, 1976. Four men gathered secretly in a private home in the Ugandan capital of Kampala.

Outside, the reign of terror launched by Uganda's bloodthirsty dictator, Idi Amin, was in full motion. Inside the house, the talk was of Amin's dreaded secret police and of international terrorist activities.

The four men were among the world's most cold-blooded, dangerous architects of political murder and mayhem. A single grenade tossed into their conference room could have spared the world much pain and misery in the years to come. But there was no one there to turn the tables on the four professional assassins.

Robert Astles, in whose home the dialogue of death was conducted, was Amin's British-born security adviser and general factotum. In his role as Idi Amin's Iago, Astles was allegedly the brains behind the security police, who butchered and tortured thousands of Ugandans during Amin's despotic rule. After Amin and Astles fled Uganda in 1979, the Briton was brought back in chains to face charges of murder. But in September 1976, he was still riding high.

Another participant was Wadi Hadad, known to some of his enemies as the "doctor of death" for his organizing of the 1972 Munich massacre of Israeli Olympic athletes. Less than three months earlier, the Israelis had thwarted Hadad's hijacking of a jetliner by their daring raid on Entebbe, the airport outside Kampala. After many hairbreadth escapes — including an Israeli bazooka blast into his hotel suite — Hadad died in bed of natural causes in 1978.

The third man was the infamous Venezuela-born assassin, Carlos — the Jackal. He was also a planner of the Munich massacre and was responsible for the kidnaping of the OPEC oil ministers in December 1975, as well as many other acts of international brigandage.

The fourth man in this gathering of professional cutthroats was an American, Frank Terpil. A newcomer to the inner circle of international terrorism, Terpil had arrived in Uganda with the personal recommendation of Libyan dictator Muammar Qaddafi. As a CIA courier some years before, Terpil had ingratiated himself with Qaddafi when the future dictator was a junior officer in the Libyan army and revolution was burning in his head.

Of the four, Terpil probably best fit the description "merchant of death." Not one to risk his own neck, he supplied explosives and other items that enabled hit men to carry out their acts of terrorism around the world. He fled the United States last fall to avoid prosecution for illegal shipment of arms to Libya. At last report, he had registered in the Wienerhaus hotel in Beirut.

Intelligence sources told my associate Dale Van Atta that the Sept. 23 meeting was Terpil's introduction to Amin's inner circle. With his macabre references from Qaddafi, Terpil signed his first contract with Amin in 1977. It was for $3.2 million worth of weapons and communications gear.

Terpil began providing Astles' security police with torture equipment, taser (electronic shock) guns and other deadly hardware. (One of Terpil's associates was to boast later about a torture he devised that required no sophisticated equipment. It consisted of a rat placed on a victim's stomach under an inverted pot, requiring the rat to gnaw its way through the man's stomach.)

Terpil's first lucrative contract with Idi Amin was followed by several more before the tyrant was finally driven from power. In fact, the American's shipments of weapons and torture devices to Amin were so ill-concealed that a Ugandan diplomat to the United Nations after Amin's fall told federal investigators he was "appalled that a U.S. citizen could conduct the activities that Mr. Terpil had conducted."

The diplomat and others indicated their belief that Terpil's nefarious trade could easily have been stopped at any time by his former employer — the CIA.

RE: FRANCIS EDWARD TERPIL;

On December 15, 1980, Jerome S. Brower appeared before Federal Judge John H. Pratt, U. S. District Court, Washington, D. C., and pled guilty to violation of Title 18, USC, Section 371 (Conspiracy). Brower admitted he conspired to violate Title 18, USC, Section 844(d) (Transport Explosives in Foreign Commerce With Intent to Use Unlawfully); Title 22, USC, Section 2778 (Unlawful Export of Defense Articles on U. S. Munitions List), and Title 49, USC, Section 1809(b) (Arms Export Control Act of 1976).

Brower's plea resulted from negotiations between Assistant U. S. Attorney (AUSA) [redacted] Washington, D. C., and Attorney [redacted] Government has agreed not to recommend sentence and Brower has agreed to fully cooperate.

On February 23, 1981, Judge Pratt sentenced Brower to five years and a $5,000 fine. Brower was ordered to serve four months to be followed by three years' probation. Remainder of sentence was suspended. b6 -2, -4
